January 2012

Spring comes early to South Florida. It's January and the palms are blooming all over the garden. A golden showering of pollen and tiny flowers cascade into the pool and coat the walkways. I have been thinking about the colors of spring. And really if art were a truth telling enterprise then a golden yellow would dominate all notions of this season. As for me I am fixated on the rose color of new skin, hidden away under layers of fleece and wool, ready to be reborn to the sun in sleeveless dresses and sandals. Not that my skin is as rosy as all that but in these heady days of fresh exposure I feel as fresh and new as a baby. As delicate and full of hope and promise as a tiny bud.
